Fiber Guide

Twenty foods, not a gram target

Fiber amounts change with the brand, the form, and the way you cook. Read the dietary fiber line on the package, or the USDA record in Food comparison. This list names foods. It does not assign you a number.

MedlinePlus describes fiber as adding bulk and says that raising fiber too quickly can cause gas, bloating, and cramps. Fluids help fiber move. If a clinician limited your fluids or your fiber, that instruction comes first.

- Rolled oats, for a breakfast you can repeat
- Lentils, from dry or from a rinsed can
- Black beans
- Chickpeas
- Split peas
- Barley
- Quinoa
- Broccoli
- Carrots
- Sweet potato, with the skin if you like it
- Apple with the skin
- Pear
- Raspberries
- Brussels sprouts
- Avocado
- Almonds
- Chia seeds, stirred into a food you already eat
- Edamame
- Plain popcorn
- Bread whose first ingredient is a whole grain, after you read the label

A small start

Add one of these foods to a meal you already make. Keep the portion modest for a few days. Drink the fluids you are allowed. The Nutrition gut page has the longer food notes and photos.
